British punk star dies of overdose

NEW YORK, Feb. 2 (R)-British punk rock star Sid Vicious died of an overdose of herain here today, one day after he was freed from jail while awaiting trial on charges of murdering his girlfriend last year. Vicious's death was reported to police by his latest girlfriend, Michelle Robinson, who said she found the musician dead in bed at her Greenwich Village apartment. The 21-year old Briton, whose real name was John Simon Richie, had been in a New York prison until vesterday, when he was freed on $50,000 bail. He was charged with the stabbing to death of 28-year-old Nancy Spungen last October, The gangly, spiked-hair Vicious denied the charge, but the district attorney's office later released an alleged confession he made to them. The trial was not expected to start for two more months. He had been treated for heroin addiction after his arrest. A police spokesman said Vicious "did not intend to kill himself. It was an accident."

Two others--m the northern part of the Jordan Valley and in the Gaza Strip - are to be established shortly, the sources said.

The sites for Nahal settlements are chosen by army headquarters. Most such settlements become permanent civilian villages when the young men and women soldiers complete the three-year military training they undergo while farming land in the vicinity.

Israeli planes reported strafing South Lebanon

BEIRUT, Feb. 2 (R)--The right-wing Falangist radio said Israeli warplanes today strafed Arnoun Castle and the neighbourhood in the eastern sector of South Lebanon.

The radio said Israeli planes flew over the southern region throughout yesterday and people in the area had been in a state of alert, "for any surprises."

Earlier today. Lebanese President Elias Sarkis called in the U.S. Ambassador in Beirut. John Gunther Dean, for an hour's discussion on the situation in the troubled south.

The envoy told reporters later: President Sarkis conveyed to me the Lebanese government's stand which I, in turn, will pass on to my government, and I can say we denounce violence everywhere. especially in Southern Lebanon."

The Lebanese government has been drawing up plans, in coordination with the U.N. Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL), to deploy regular troops in the southern region bordering Israel and restore normal life to the area.

CAIRO, Feb. 2 (R)--President Anwar Sadat said today that the Sinai oil is not a problem hindering a peace treaty with Israel, the official Middle East News Agency (MENA) reported.

The oil concerned is in the part of the Sinai Peninsula which Israel would hand back to Egypt under the proposed treaty.

Mr. Sadat said Egypt would wait to hear from President Carter on the next step for reviving the stalled peace talks.

Mr. Sadat, who was inspecting new houses under construction at his Nile Delta village of Mit Abul Kom told reporters that President Carter is currently busy with Chinese Vice-Premier Deng Xia-oping "but I hope to hear from him soon".

Dr. Bakhtiar said that if the Avatollah unilaterally announced a provisional government for his planned Islamic republic "I would ignore it as far as possible."

He said "Mr. Khomeini is now here and he can help us on certain problems...we can accept his judgment on questions of religion or social affairs but when he wants to be foreign minister--really...

He added that he had made a number of proposals but did not say what kind of response he had received.

The Prime Minister said there was no question of a military coupin Iran for the time being.

"The army does not command in Iran," Dr. Bakhtiar said. "It must remain at the service of government policy and in the current situation. I exclude any coup d'etat by the army".

Tito enjoys Kuwaiti sun, inspects joint projects

KUWAIT, Feb. 2 (R)--President Tito of Yugoslavia, on a four-day visit to this Gulf state, went on a sightseeing tour today to inspect construction projects and other schemes in Kuwait.

Earlier, the 86-year-old president held informal talks with Kuwaiti Heir-Apparent and Premier Sheikh Sa'ad Al Abdulla Al Sabah. Officials said the discussions dealt with Middle East developments and boosting bilateral relations.

Formal talks between the Yugoslav leader, who arrived here yesterday, and the Emir of Kuwait Sheikh Jaber Al Ahmed Al Sabah are due to begin tomorrow on a wide-range of bilateral. Arab and non-aligned issues. The president, on the first stop of a two-week trip which will also take him to Iraq, Syria and Jordan, visited Kuwait Towers, a tourist landmark being constructed by a Yugoslav firm, which is expected to be completed within two months. Enjoying the warmth of Kuwait, President Tito looked fit as he drove through the capital's streets with Finance Minister Abdel-Rahman Al Atiqi, head of the mission of honour assigned to accompany him during his stay. President Tito and the Emir are expected to discuss the Middle East situation including latest developments of Egyptian-Israel peace moves. Kuwait, like the three other states he will visit, is opposed to last September's Camp David peace accords between Egypt and Israel. The political turmoil in Iran is also expected to be discussed by the two heads of state, informed sources said. President Tito is also expected to seek an expansion of Yugoslav-

LONDON, Feb. 2 (R)-Britain today ordered an end to virginity checks on Asian women coming here to be married. The Home Office admitted that an Indian woman had been medically tested at Heathrow Airport last week to see if she had ever borne a child. The tests are designed to help immigration officials check whether claims of intended marriage to British residents are genuine. The Home Office said the woman, aged 35, had been examined because an immigration officer suspected she might already have been married. It said the test showed she had never had MADRID, Feb. 2 (R) -- The self-proclaimed King of Albania has left Spain on the advice of authorities who threatened to confiscate an arsenal of weapons found in his Madrid residence, Spanish officials reported today. Wrong Church, wrong pew

WHEN SENATOR Frank Church acceded recently to the chairmanship of the important U.S. Senate Foreign Relations Committee, it was a clear setback for Arab interests in Washington, A long-time captive of Zionist influence on Congress, and an ambitious Democratic Party presidential aspirant, Senator Church suddenly found himself occupying a useful new platform from which to expound his distorted view of American Middle East policy.

Now, in a speech to a Jewish audience in Florida, Mr. Church has outdone himself with a stinging attack on Saudi Arabia, calling that country a "detriment to peace" and warning the Saudis that their "special relationship" with the United States "cannot be a one-way street."

The timing of the speech is nothing if not curious, coming just as the Saudis themselves are re-assessing their relationship with the United States in the light of what they see as the growing undependability of America as an ally, as an economic partner, and as a guarantor against sudden changes in the strategic balance in the Gulf. If the Saudis are wavering, Mr. Church seems determined to give them

The Saudi rulers might agree with Senator Church that their relationship with the U.S. cannot be a "one-way street"; from their point of view, indeed, it is perhaps time to reverse direction from this cul-de-sac.

Financially, the Saudis have kept a substantial proportion of their oil surpluses in dollars, and have stoutly defended and helped to prop up that currency, when all about them had long since lost faith in American fiscal policy. Because of the dollar's loss of value since 1973, they have watched their oil earnings decline alarmingly in value; where they could have prevailed on their OPEC partners to raise crude oil prices to compensate for these losses, they have instead engineered moderate price rises which have not kept pace with inflation.

As an added vote of confidence in the American system, they have spent billions on importing U.S. technology (often when the comparable European or Japanese technology was not only cheaper but more suitable), and have invested millions more in U.S. industry and real estate (for which they have been branded as greedy interlopers trying to "buy up America"). In recent weeks, they have reluctantly increased their oil production to make up for the reduced flow of oil to America from Iran. And, of course, they continue to wait patiently for the U.S. to adopt a sensible energy policy, while pressing ahead themselves with pioneering research into solar energy.

Politically, for wanting to share responsibility with the U.S. in defending the oilfields of the Gulf and the Arabian peninsula against subversion, they have seen their offer to buy advanced American jet fighters subjected to insulting scrutiny by an ill-informed Congress and a Zionistinfluenced press and public ("only 15 minutes supersonic flying time from Tabuk to Tel Aviv"). And recently they have watched with alarm as the U.S. has waffled and wavered in Iran, only to be told now by Senator Church that a similar fate might be in store for Saudi Arabia.

We shall save for another day any comment on Mr. Church's insistence that Saudi Arabia is hindering the Camp David peace process. We don't expect he knows much about Jerusalem, or what's happening on the West Bank, or about the extent to which Egypt's day-to-day survival (and, incidentally, that of many other countries, particularly in Africa) depends on Saudi generosity. Such information is probably not contained in the B'nai B'rith information kit from which he derives the inspiration for his public speeches.

ARAB PRESS COMMENTARY

AL RA'I Friday stresses the importance of Prime Minister Mudar Badran's meeting with officials and heads of municipal councils of the Zarqa District on Thursday. The visit, it says. reflects the government's readiness to always suggest and find out solutions for all problems facing the people of the country through an imaginative comprehension of these problems and scientific study for their solution.

Al Ra'i notes that the human influx to Jordan caused by Zionist aggression during the wars of 1948 and 1967 has doubled responsibilities of the government to provide adequate public services for this unnatural population growth which repeated itself twice in less than 30 years.

Despite Jordan's limited natural resources, measures taken by the government were able to "absorb" a large number of problems and provide the best possible services in the fields of education, health, road building and other public utilities, the newspaper says.

AL DUSTOUR says the tumultuous welcome accorded to Ayatollah Khomeini's return to Tehran on Thursday is almost unprecedented in the annals of history. It may be compared with the return of Napoleon from his exile in Elba Island or the return of Julius Caesar from his vict orious conquests. In the case of Muslims reflecting on their past heroic deeds, Mhomeini's comeback may be similar in intent and content to the Prophet Mohammad's conquest of Mecca after so many years of exile in the Medina or the conquest of Jerusalem by Saladin after many decades of the Crusaders' domination.

The big world powers which now stand bewildered at the present monumental revolutionary phenomenon in Iran, must take into account that Islam is a living, dynamic and growing force that must be recognised as such and dealt with from the position of respect and understanding.

Civil Defence Dept. operates fire brigade, provides emergency ambulance service

By Alan Martiny

... Special to the Jordan Times

AMMAN-One characteristic of disasters is that they usually strike at the most unlikely time, when you least expect them. And they usually happen so quickly and forcefully that if one is not well prepared, lives and property are unnecessarily lost. So it is comforting to know that there are people around who are trained. equipped and prepared to help in

Jordan groups its disaster relief into the Civil Defence Department, comprised of the fire brigade, civil defence, rescue and ambulance services. Regular civil defence units are spread throughout the country, ready to handle any kind of emergency at a moment's notice. The department has a unit in each subgovernorate responsible for the surrounding

"Our system is based on joint support." Col. Mohammad Khasawneh, Assistant Director General of the Civil Defence Department told the Jordan Times, "If a village needs help they can get it from another unit nearby or from Amman."

Salt, for example, can deal with normal emergency cases. But if something major happens which they are unable to handle they can get support from Jerash. Amman or Shunah. "One day we sent fire tenders to Aqaba from Amman. Madaba and Karak because a ship caught fire in the harbour." Col. Khasawneh said. "By this strategy we are able to handle every situation. And we thank God we have never failed.'

So the department is usually able to handle most situations unaided. But for larger emergencies the department involves its volunteer forces. And in grave emergencies or situations requiring widespread relief it has contingency plans for training and mobilising the local population.

"We have a very good group of volunteers." he said. "They are completely volunteers too, receiving no pay. Some are doctors, teachers, engineers, students and workers." Two years ago when the cholera epidemic hit Jordan, most of the city cleaning was handled by

The voluntary sector is organised into 14 regions in Amman.

Fire fighters of the Civil Defence Department must be prepared to answer alerts from as far away as

Each region has a station with four groups: one for fire fighting, one for first aid, one for rescue and one for "civil guidance" -- training and mobilising the civilian population.

Daily we receive reports of incidents handled by our voluntary units." Mr. Khasawneh said. "When we need them they are on 24 hour notice and can be used anywhere in the country."

Some individuals in the voluntary units with specialised abilities have also made their talents available for public use. A couple of doctors have provided free clinics and some women have opened a school for illiterate women in their region.

In Amman the Civil Defence Department has four stations: headquarters, located opposite the General Intelligence Building. the municipal fire brigade in the downtown area, a unit in Sweileh for the western part of Amman eastern part of the city.

"We're not quite satisfied with this though," he said. "We're hoping to open more this year."

The department tries to get the most advanced equipment. It has modern fire renders, snorkels, hydraulic ladders and other standard gear. "In three months we are going to buy a 40 metre turntable ladder, with another two in about a year," which will be necessary as the height of Amman's buildings increases.

Asked if the new high-rise buildings such as the new 21-story Sheraton Hotel or the 19-story Commercial Complex planned for downtown, will complicate matters or surpass the department's fire fighting capabilities, he explained that before any building is constructed in Jordan the design must be presented to the department for examination.

We advise the contractors on things to do in advance for safety and fire prevention. First of all." he said, "they have to have their own means of fire fighting; a water reservoir on top of the building and water points on each floor."

With public places the department studies the exit path which has to be designed for a specific and a unit at the airport for the number of people per minute. We generally consider two and a half minutes the limit for evacuating all the people," he said. So on that basis the exit must be adequately designed. This is particularly directed at the cinemas and hotels:

> Before construction of a building can begin, the owners must place a deposit in the bank equivalent to the cost of the safety features required by the department. This way if the builder does not do what we ask we can take the money and do the things ourselves." he said.

Given all the safety measures and facilities provided for in the new wave of tall buildings. Col. Khasawneh feels the fire brigade will be able to manage.

One of Jordan's advantages over other parts of the world is that the building materials used here provide natural protection. "The fact that buildings here are made of stone helps us quite a bit." he said. "In the United States and Europe they build with combustible materials."

The department also has a Safety and Protection Branch which sets the standards for the sale and use of dangerous items, like LP gas cylinders, chemicals and poisons. "They must come to us for approval and we give them a list of specifications to fulfill."

Over the last five years incidents of fire in the kingdom have increased by about 16.5 percent a year. Last year there were more than 1100 fires, or slightly over three fires a day.

Most of these were, of course, minor. But some were not. The, biggest fire last year was at the Fine paper factory containing thousands of rolls of thin paper. The area unit wasn't well organised and surrounding stores blocked the firemen from the biaze. It took a long time to put the fire out, Mr. Khasawneh said.

"The worst fires are not necessarily the largest in size," he explained. "The worst ones are the ones which might spread. Next to the Fine factory was a battery factory with thousands of old tyres. Also nearby was an oxygen manufacturer. If the fire had carried it could have been a real dis-

In 1977 this increased to JD 188,531 for 194,534 kilos. "This shows that people are becoming more safety conscious," he noted.

The use of the ambulance service, another one of the department's responsibilities, has also increased over the last four years by about 12 per cent annually.

The government is now planning to set up a special ambulance service, utilizing the new microwave emergency telephone system along the bighways. By pressing a button on the phone or talking to the operator, a signal indicating the location of the accident would be relayed to the nations in cases of emergen emergency ambulance.

In my experience, civil defence is never enough, Col. Khasawneh said. "When a major disaster. from wars in the area thete comes you need many organisations, people and materials."

One of the biggest problems, he said, is that few countries can afford to maintain a large civil defence organisation. No country, not even the richest, can afford such a big effort. zip Vietnamese --born Le-thu Purifoy exudes. The diminutive dynamo produced more than 20 oriental courses-topped by a roast suckling pig (purchased in Lebanon). The Purifoy apartment was decorated with strings of coloured lights, tinsel and traditional Vietnamese New Year decorations.

The host is in Damascus with U.S.A.LD. and so it was no surprise to see numerous A.I.D. representatives including Don and Helen Yeman and Ann and Dr. Nassib Hemaidan chatting with William C. LaBaugh, vice president of Daniel Mann, Johnson and Mendenhall of New York City. Mr. LaBaugh recently arrived in Syria as a consultant for the . proposed Damascus-Dera' Highway.

It was indeed one of the most spectacular fashion extravaganzas ever staged in Damascus when the Iragis presented a parade of oriental attire spanning 5,000 years at the Meridien Hotel Tuesday evening.

The seven models were startlingly beautiful--and readily identifiable--the staging, fashions, fabrics, music and backdrops truly made it a thousand and one nights as the mannequins glided across the runway to the rythmns of throbbing bedouin drums.

Costumes copied after artifactual remains from Sumer of 3500 B.C. opened the show; these were followed by a designer's version of Akkadian costumes, then by a sequence dedicated to the Babylonian kingdom of 1750 B.C. in which models appeared in tiered sequinned gowns and cobra turbans. The Assyrian period was represented by models carrying flaming torches, two of them wore feathered wings noted in Assyrian friezes.

Backdrops depicting the Sumerian and Assyrian periods were removed to reveal 16 shimmering Arab tents as the Islamic period was introduced by models wearing embroidered gowns that accurately depicted scenes from the miniatures of Al Wasiti. Modern evening attire illustrating the textile weaving genius of Iraq rounded out the spectacular.

The Iraqi costume show is next slated for European capitals. There's no doubt about it, spectators will be wowed--it is better than many Parisian fashion previews, but, of course, the presentation has an unbeatable theme--5,000 years of Iraqi history. The show was so popular with the standing-room-only audience of more than 700 persons that it was repeated Friday night. There's a chance it will be repeated this week, please call the Meridien Hotel for confirmation.

If you have items for the Damas-Scene column, please send them 10 days in advance to Pat McDonnell, P.O.B. 5601, Damascus, Syria.

Jordanian-Dutch archaeological digs to begin in Jordan Valley

AMMAN, Feb. 2 (JNA)--The Department of Antiquities in cooperation with the Palestine archaeological institute at Leyden University in Holland will start archaeological digs near Deir Alla in the Jordan Valley on Saturday. The aim of the new excavations. expected to last two months, is to unearth further layers of living quarters that date back to a period between the seventh and fifth centuries B.C. which is known as the late iron age, Director of the Department of Antiquities Adnan Al Hadidi said yesterday The excavators hope to get more information about an ancient wall on which Aramaic writings had been found and also to unearth the earliest antiquities lying in the area, Dr. Al Hadidi said. He added that Aramaic writings found at the site are now on display at the Jordanian Archaeological Museum in Amman. University students of archaeology from Jordan and Holland are taking part in the

More than ever, the world's fine arts buyers are beating a path to London where the capital's best known auction houses chalk up new records year by year in their volume of sales. At the end of the 1977-1978 season Christies recorded an increase of 34 per cent on the previous year's sales. Sotheby showed a rise of 31 per cent and Phillips, the third ranking saleroom, recorded a 28 per cent improvement.

All three firms attributed much of the increase in business to the growing importance of overseas buyers, both in London and in its salerooms in other countries. In 1978 Christies added an office in Vienna to. its 14 branches worl-

Domestic demand also has boomed since the 1960s through the growth of investment buying as a hedge against inflation, and the spread of informed interest in antiques. The late 1960s saw a series of record breaking sales, at one of which a Velasquez portrait broke the hitherto undreamed of £2 million barrier, and for the first time television cameras went into Sotheby's and Christies' salerooms to convey the excitement to viewers more familiar with the suspense of a world boxing championship.

As the collecting mania spread it seemed that very few items were unworthy of some collector's attention somewhere and this was reflected in the "Big Two" opening branches devoted to mementoes of the Victorian, Edwardian and even later periods. The definition of an antique departed from its previous strict frontier of 1830. and Art Deco objects of a century later were soon soaring in price.

Sotheby even puts 1950s jukeboxes, Hornby toy trains, old typewriters and prewar cigarette cards into its collector's sales, and the buying field spread to "collector's cars", old costumes, photographs, lead soldiers and a host of other things which a few years earlier could have been bought for the proverbial song. Christies' subsidiary branch dealing in these "new antiques" has quadrupled its turnover in four

The art-as-investment boom reached a peak in the early 1970s as investors sought a more stable home for their money than the plunging stock market. Many dealers disapproved strongly of the trend, despite the extra bus-

This happened notably in the case of English Georgian silver in 1969, and a few years later one prominent British financier who had bought heavily into 19th century Dutch landscapes lost a considerable sum when financial problems forced him to sell toosoon, as did a property developer who had bought second rank

Reitlinger placed the real peak of the art market around 1912 and noted that even prices paid for Rembrandt paintings had only just kept pace with inflation, compared with what was being paid in the depressed 1930s.

Nevertheless, prices continued to rise strikingly--if somewhat more steadily--after the flurry of the investment boom. Some particularly notable increases have been in Oriental rugs (London has been the centre for this trade since 1900 and almost all the rugs that pass through its warehouses are re-exported to the Middle East and Europe, prices in some cases rising four or fivefold in three years): what dealers call "the small, portable investment' (gold coins, fine watches, loose the 19th century, which have vulnerability also precluded East from looking for a possible minor suit sacrifice.

West led his singleton heart, and East won the ace. The automatic defense is to return a heart, giving partner a ruff. After that, however, the defenders will be able to get the ace of clubs-if they take it at once-but no more. Declarer will eventually be able to 185 0 0 7 4 3 2 hearts after drawing trumps.

Before leading to the second trick. East gave the hand careful thought. It was reasonable to assume that declarer had at least one of the minor suit aces. If he held the ace of clubs, the defenders were belpless since the heart suit was already set up for discards. However, if declarer held the ace of diamonds and West the ace of clubs, the contract could be defeated providing declarer held at least two clubs.

Once he had worked this out. East's defense became obvious. After winning the ace of hearts, he shifted to

Space-age probe

Know-how from the German aircraft and space research industry has led to an unusual spin-off: a fine medical instrument such as no other company has yet been able to produce. This is a scalpel probe to facilitate the removal of vessel narrowings in the urinary tract. The industry worked closely with prologists from a local clinic. Apart from developing a remote control device, the main thing was to use a material which was physiologically harmless. First tests have already proved successful. (DaD pho(o)

U.S.-Soviet summit reportedly still on

"There will be a summit," the sources said last night, but the time and place had not vet been worked out. These would probably depend on progress in solving the few remaining issues blocking a new Strategic Arms Limitation (SALT) treaty.

The initial Soviet assessment was that, generally speaking, President Carter handled the Deng visit "prudently," although the Russians were critical of the timing of the visit just one month after the opening of U.S.-Chinese diplomatic relations.

The Soviet news agency Tass yesterday criticised speeches made by Mr. Deng attacking the Soviet Union, and the sources said criticism also could be expected of the final communique on the talks.

The communique's use of the word "hegemony", a Chinese code-word for what Peking calls Soviet aggressive intentions, would provoke objections, the source said. This was despite the White House explanation that the term had been used twice before in Sino-American documents and a subsequent slight softening of the relevant paragraph.

In referring to Mr. Deng's speeches criticising the Soviet Union, the sources said: "The sight of Deng attacking the Soviet Union in the National Gallery of Art is not going to help U.S.-Soviet relations.

"It also makes it more difficult for the United States to conduct its foreign policy." The Chinese leader accused the Soviet Union of seeking global domination and said Moscow was backing Vietnam's "massive armed aggression" against Kampuchea (Cambodia).

The source said the Soviet Union felt that China gained far more than the United States from Mr. Deng's visit.

But a senior U.S. official said the clarification had been given this week when President Carter made clear the United States did not share China's view of its communist rival. The president said at a White House signing ceremony on Wednesday for four U.S.-Chinese cooperation accords that on broad, global problems the United States and China did not always concur.

The word "global" has become diplomatic shorthand for relations with the Soviet Union.

In addition, the joint communique issued here said the two sides discussed "those areas in which they have differing perspectives.

Soviet Ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin was briefed yesterday by Secretary of State Cyrus Vance on the Carter-Deng talks, the State Department said.

Reliable sources said SALT was also discussed and added: "Things are moving along SALT both here and in Geneva (where the permanent SALT delegations are stable world," the official New China News Agency (NCNA) said in a report from Washington.

When Mr. Deng shook hands with President Carter, "it was a moment that marked a significant change in the world."

The agency said that the first meeting of the two men was quickly crowned with remarkable results satisfactory to both sides, and they found that they shared identical views on many issues.

"The subject of their discussions-the present world situation-is far from tranquil and is in fact getting more and more turbulent. So it is not surprising that they devoted most of the time to an appraisal of that situation."

The agency said the military growth of the Soviet Union could not be overlooked. "No part of the world is free from menace, the menace from the north," it said.

"The polar bear (Moscow) wants to enfold the whole globe," the agency said. "It has reached the seas from the Indian Ocean to Vietnam's Cam Ranh Bay, Kampuchea has fallen victim to outright armed aggression and the Malacca Strait (between Indonesia and Malaysia) becomes the convergent point of the pincers of the Soviet navy. The factor making for war is growing vis-

The agency said that it was against this background that Mr. Deng had pointed out during his Washington visit that both China and the United States approached the development of their relations from a long-range strategic point of view and that the two countries should have a greater sense of responsibility for the maintenance of world peace and stability. The Chinese agency said that differences in their social systems did not prevent the two countries from arriving at a general agree-

Saudi Arabia is 'detriment to peace,' claims U.S. senator

WASHINGTON, Feb. 2 (R) — The chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee yesterday urged a fundamental review of U.S. policy towards Saudi Arabia, saving the Saudis were a detriment to peace. In a critical assessment of U.S. Middle East policy since last September's Camp David accords, Senator Frank Church (democrat, Idaho) said that Saudi Arabia was "far more a detriment to peace than we (the United States) are willing to admit." He said the administration should examine the advisability of going ahead with the sale of 60 advanced F-15 fighter aircraft to Saudi Arabia.

"It is time for plain speaking with the government of Saudi Arabia," Senator Church said in a speech prepared for delivery to the antidefamation league of B nai B rith, a major U.S. Jewish organisation, at Palm Beach, Florida. "I suggest that now is precisely the time to inform the Saudis that a 'special relationship' cannot be a one-way street."

Senator Church noted that following the collapse of the Shah of Iran, the United States had agreed to fly F-15 fighters into Saudi Arabia as a show of support and said it was taken as a sign that the administration intended to go through with the S2.5 billion sale of F-15 and F-5E aircraft.

Despite these overtures, he said. Saudi Arabia had joined the "pan Arab chorus" in politically isolating Egypt, had threatened to invoke sanctions against Egypt and had "agreed to participate in the payment of billions of dollars to Syria and Jordan to stay out of the Camp David peace pro-

Senator Church said the Saudis could not count on unequivocal U.S. support without demonstrating they were responsive to the fundamental U.S. concern over the conclusion of an Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty.

Senator Church said the United States had misjudged the situation in Iran and said he feared it was "equally out of touch with the realities in Saudi Arabia."

He also said the Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty should be signed in its present form and the United States should abandon efforts to appease. Arab parties opposed to the Camp David approach by putting pressure on Israel.

Former Ethiopia official dies in jail

Deressa, once a mainstay of former Emperor Haile Selassie's Ethiopian rule, has died of cancer in an Addis Ababa jail.

His son, Benyam Yilma Deressa, said the family recently learned that their father died on Jan. 20. He said his father, who was impriosoned five years ago with members of Emperor Haile Selassie's family and several other ministers, had been found innocent of any crime against the state by an enquiry commission established by the military government that overthrew the emperor in September 1974. Despite his exoneration, his wife was barred from visiting him and he died in

During the Italian occupation of the country, Mr. Yilma, then a nationalist combatant, was jailed from 1937 to 1939 and put under house arrest from 1940 to 1941.

After the Italian occupation forces left, he organised the country's first Ministry of Finance and became its chief executive. He had been educated at the London School of Economics.

The Backfire--NATO code name for the Tupolev TU-26 twin-jet swing-wing bomber--has been a cause of argument in U.S.—Soviet negotiations for a second SALT (Strategic Arms

Europe's market in share options

By Terry Byland

LONDON: The U.S. businessman has always seen himself as the true pioneer of capitalism, committed to the pursuit of free enterprise to a degree never equalled by his European counterparts, and he is often quite correct. American business enthrones competition and rejects the suggestion that any business sector, be it banking, medicare, or pension insurance, can regard itself as above the fray.

But American capitalism has not always travelled well when exported to Europe, where stock exchanges, to name but one example, have proved unwilling to accept the full implications of naked competition.

It is beginning to look as though the market in traded share options--Chicago's latest contribution to the world of business--has suffered a severe bout of sea sickness during the transatlantic voyage.

For there is now a marked divergence of experience between the U.S. markets in share options, which go from strength to which look more and more like weak sisters at the end of the first year of trading approaches.

The concept of trading in options on shares, as distinct from simply taking an option and then waiting for the due time before deciding what to do with it, was born in Chicago in April 1973. Share options now attract investors by the millions in the U.S. and are traded on every major American exchange, except for the New York Stock Exchange.

It is not too much to say that the progress of share option trading in the U.S. has astounded even the most hardened market men. Turnover in share options has risen from zero in 1973 to an estimated ten billion contracts in 1978.

Option trading played a significant role in the rapid rise in U.S. equity markets early in 1978; it has since survived a freeze on new listing imposed by the Securities and Exchange Commission, which is even now endeavouring to complete a study of a market which, it is generally agreed, is still somewhere beyond buman ken.

When Europe, after much encouragement from across the. Atlantic, decided to try out an options market of its own, it was Amsterdam and London which vied for the honour of opening the show in April 1978.

But the attractions now seem to be fading fast. Turnover on the Amsterdam options exchange (the European Options Exchange) broke through to above 10,000 contracts per week just before Christmas. This was heartening, but a far cry from the. target of 7,000 contracts a day which the exchange originally hoped to achieve within the first year of trading. In fact this target has now been abandoned and the exchange would be more than happy with a total of 2,000 contracts a day -- a figure requiring a substantial further improvement on performance to date.

London chose last April to open a subdued and relatively expensive system of options trading and, within its somewhat limited target range, made a fair start. The market was then aiming at a break-even point of about 800 contracts per day.

Share options trading is booming on. almost every American stock exchange, but the introduction of the idea on the other side of the Atlantic has had mixed results.

But before the end of the year, authorities towards taxation on the London Stock Exchange disclosed that option turnover was reaching record totals of 1,200 contracts a day, and that the exchange was making a profit on fraded option business.

The exchange commented that investors of nearly all types" had moved into options, taking over the running of the market from the professional. This calmed a fear that the private investor - who is becoming an increasingly rare bird in the U.K. - would not take the lead from his U.S. counterpart who has jumped into the option market.

But London may have been clapping itself on the back too soon. For the U.K. Inland Revenue delivered a shock to the option market with a ruling on capital gains tax,

The ruling, which said that investing institutions normally exempt from capital gains tax are not so exempt when dealing in options, was not wholly unexpected. The attitude of the U.K.

option profits has always been a major uncertainty for the market. But the ruling against the institutions certainly dealt a blow to the option market. Turnover fell from an average 768 contracts a day to only 559 in the days following the Inland Revenue statement. It can be said that many of the market professionals still believe that London will follow the Dutch lead in releasing from taxation profits made by offering stock for option contracts - or "writing" as it is known. However, only the future. can tell. Perhaps more disappointing has been the almostcomplete collapse of hope that Europe would, in the case of traded options, manage to present a united front to thatch the power of the U.S. markets and investors option markets The rivalry between Amsterdam and prove and London to be the first to opencan now be regarded as no more than a piece of rather children his --
